

BASED IN PARIS, FRANCE

Good strategy is a bet you can defend — with data, or with instinct. I build both.

Marketing.

ESSEC MiM 5 Countries — 2 called home

Email me

LinkedIn

"Every friend group has a designated driver. Mine has a designated closer — that's me. I pitch the most random side quests, absorb the objections, and somehow still get everyone to show up. I like to call this marketing. They tend to use less flattering words."

— how my friends would describe my actual core competency

01 — ABOUT

From engineering to strategy.

Coming from a family with a long tradition of government service, I chose engineering instead — studying Biotechnology at Delhi Technological University, and becoming the first engineer in my family. Countless assignments, practicals, vivas and exams drilled a quantitative, analytical instinct into me that's stuck ever since.

That same appetite for unfamiliar territory carried into my first job — interning as an engineer at a law firm, of all places. I came in short on patience, expecting clients to move at my pace. My supervisor corrected that, and I learned to meet people where they are instead.

Then came the defining chapter: co-building a startup with three friends who became colleagues, in a field none of us had properly trained for. My title said Marketing Strategist, but the work spanned marketing, strategy, sales, and operations at once. Store visits taught me more than dashboards ever did — the distance between assumption and reality is wider than it looks.

In 2024, I stepped away to care for a close family member, and spent 13 months volunteering with Jijeevisha, working with women and children in a Delhi rag-pickers' settlement — both taught me more about patience and empathy than any job has.

AT A GLANCE

BASED IN

Paris, France

STUDYING

ESSEC MiM

BACKGROUND

B.Tech, Biotechnology
Engineering

PREVIOUSLY

Marketing Strategist, Epicere
India

LANGUAGES

English, French, Hindi, Punjabi

LOOKING FOR

Apprenticeship and Internships

DREAM FIELD

Football or Media &
Entertainment

In August 2025, I joined ESSEC. Paris has since become home — apprenticeship applications, an ongoing immersion into French life, and coursework spanning Elle & Vire, Revolut's scorecard, and Smart Wanderers. But it's the fan-loyalty strategy I built for the Belgian national football team that's stayed with me most — a reminder that football, or the wider entertainment and media industry, is where I'm genuinely hoping to build a career, not just a case study I once wrote.

02 – CAREER

Decisions, impact, learnings.

Marketing Strategist (Full-time)

Jan 2023 – Mar 2024

Epicere India — B2B2C shopper-marketing platform

Built acquisition and engagement dashboards, ran pay-for-performance campaigns, and negotiated terms directly with 50+ retail partners across Delhi NCR.

The title said Marketing Strategist, but the job touched marketing, strategy, sales and operations all at once — we were four people trying to keep up with a market that moved faster than any of us could plan for. Store visits taught me more than any dashboard did: the gap between what we assumed from behind a laptop and what a shop owner actually deals with is wider than you'd think.

- Marketing Strategy
- Sales & Operations
- Power BI
- Tableau
- Partner Negotiation

32,000 platform users grown	2M+ homepage impressions	75%+ of 50+ retail partners onboarded
---	--	---

- @epicereindia
- Live site

Maintained a legal database for clients, streamlined Statement of Work production, and introduced a web-scraping solution that saved 60+ hours of secondary research.

My first real professional role, and I had more enthusiasm than patience. I expected clients to move at my speed — my supervisor had to walk me back from that. Once it clicked, I learned the real skill wasn't the technical work, it was meeting people where they are instead of assuming they'd meet me.

- Data Cleaning & Validation
- Statements of Work
- Client Communication
- Process Optimisation

03 — EDUCATION

Two years apart, one throughline.

Master in Management — ESSEC Business School

Aug 2025 — Present

Paris, France | MiM (#3, QS 2025)

B.Tech, Biotechnology Engineering — Delhi Technological University

Aug 2018 — May 2022

First Division — Delhi, India

04 — SKILLS

What I bring.

Marketing & Strategy	Commercial & Analytics	AI & Tools
Digital Marketing Strategy	B2B Negotiation	Claude
Brand Management	CRM & Pipeline Management	Gemini · ChatGPT
Strategic Analysis & Planning	Power BI	Canva
Competitive Benchmarking	Tableau	Kling AI · OpenArt
Consumer Insights	SQL

English — Fluent, C2

French — A2, actively improving

Hindi — Native

Punjabi — Fluent, C1

Things I built.

Four ESSEC case studies — full decks available on request.

ESSEC SPORTS MARKETING • 2026 • FEATURED

Belgium United

A year-round loyalty platform for the Belgian national football team, moving fans from tournament-only spectators to active, year-round participants. The project closest to my actual ambition — working in football, someday, for real.

Fan engagement

Loyalty strategy

Activation roadmap

View full deck →

CASE STUDY

Elle & Vire

Brand Management
Date: 1 Jun 2016

BRAND MANAGEMENT

Elle & Vire

Brand architecture and a house-of-brands extension strategy.

Positioning

Architecture

View full deck →

SMART WANDERERS

Road to market intermediate report

Entrepreneurship

ENTREPRENEURSHIP

Smart Wanderers

A budget-first travel concept, validated with real users and an MVP.

Customer discovery

MVP

View full deck →

Balance Score Card

Management Control - Mar 2026

MANAGEMENT CONTROL

Revolut Scorecard

A four-perspective KPI framework linking talent, trust and revenue.

Balanced Scorecard

KPI design

View full deck →

What I'm exploring.

EXPLORING

AI & digital transformation

— how institutions worldwide are recalibrating policy against an accelerating technological landscape

European football — the new season's opening weeks, form, and the shifting balance of power

India's evolving landscape

— the social, political and commercial currents shaping it, even from a distance

French language & culture

— a deliberate, ongoing immersion well beyond the classroom

READING

A small stack from Oxford's Very Short Introduction series — four picked up recently: The Body, The European Union, Alexander the Great, and Reality. Haven't cracked them open yet, but they're earmarked for the next long flight.

WATCHING

Mostly re-runs these days — working through The Sopranos again, alongside a loose thread of films shot in Paris, most recently Midnight in Paris and The Bourne Identity. Always open to recommendations for good French cinema.

What I do when I'm not doing this.

Football & Cricket

Cricket found me first — I was three, and it's my older brother's fault. It stayed with me competitively through school, until the summer of 2014 handed my heart to someone new: Real Madrid won La Décima that year, and I haven't looked back since. Football is where most of my attention goes now — I'm not going to pretend I'm any good at playing it, but I understand the game better than most who are, and that love has grown well past the 90 minutes into how the sport works commercially and how it moves people. Working in football, in some capacity, is one of two dream roles I'm chasing. Cricket, meanwhile, is different — I don't watch it much anymore, but I can still follow the game at the same level as someone who does, because it's not really something I learned. I grew up inside it.

Tennis

I watched Federer's whole second prime — the comeback after 2016 was one of the great sports stories of my lifetime — and I still haven't fully recovered from the 2019 Wimbledon final, two championship points from history, lost to Djokovic in a match that still haunts me a little.

Cinema

Cinema is my second language, and that started early. I was partly raised by a television — sitting in front of it as a kid with zero control over what was actually playing, and somehow still falling completely in love with the old classic Hindi films that happened to be on. Once I actually got a say in what I watched, that catalogue just kept expanding — other regional Indian cinema, then British and American films. These days I'll watch something in a language I don't speak a word of, subtitles the only bridge, because good world-building doesn't need a shared vocabulary to pull you somewhere else entirely.

Current affairs, politics & history

I follow current affairs, politics and history closely, partly because the world feels more volatile than it used to, and partly because I think staying informed is less a hobby than a responsibility — to your own judgment, and to the people around you. I believe pacifism deserves more advocates than it gets. And history, cliché as it sounds, is the one record we have of what we got right and what we got catastrophically wrong — ignoring it doesn't feel like an option.

For more than two years, I also served as a caregiver for a close family member — work that never shows up on a CV, but taught me more about empathy and patience than anything else here.

08 — SAY HELLO

Let's connect.

Open to marketing, strategy and business development apprenticeships starting September 2026, based in Paris. And if you'd simply like to connect for any other reason, I'd encourage you to reach out just the same.

EmailLinkedIn